The Court of Appeal (BCCA) considered an application by Canada Post for intervenor status in the CBC's appeal from the dismissal of its petition to quash a decision of the Workers' Compensation Appeal Tribunal.

The Court dismissed the application, finding that Canada Post did not have a direct interest in the appeal and the fact that Canada Post might have been affected by the outcome of the appeal was not sufficient in itself to justify its intervention. Canada Post did not demonstrate that its submissions would be useful or different from those of the parties to the appeal.
